TweetsRiver is an RSS Reader combined with a Twitter reader. Activation of the tyrosine kinase JAK3 is associated with hyporesponsiveness of human T lymphocytes to phorbol esters. We have investigated the role of tyrosine kinases in the signaling pathway triggered by phorbol 12-myristate 13-acetate (PMA) in human T lymphocytes. CD4+ T cells from chronic myelogenous leukemia and from healthy controls were treated with PMA. CD4+ T cells from chronic myelogenous leukemia patients showed a decreased capacity to proliferate and to increase expression of IL-2 receptor and membrane immunoglobulin when stimulated with PMA compared with T cells from healthy controls. This decreased response correlated with the lower phosphorylation state of the tyrosine kinase JAK3 and with a smaller amount of total JAK3 protein. PMA was found to act on only one of the two

JAK3 isoenzymes, and this was followed by partial dephosphorylation of the tyrosine residues of the two JAK3 isoenzymes. Treatment of CD4+ T cells with the JAK3 inhibitor AG490, or with a peptide that specifically inhibits JAK3, attenuated both the PMA-dependent and the PMA-independent proliferation of the cells. Normal T cell proliferation was markedly reduced upon exposure to the JAK3 inhibitors or to a peptide encompassing residues from the ATP-binding site. Our results demonstrate that an activation pathway mediated by tyrosine kinases is involved in the signaling induced by PMA in human T cells and that these kinases can mediate the proliferation of T cells after a brief PMA treatment, whereas the sensitivity to the proliferative signal of T cells from chronic myelogenous leukemia patients is impaired. [Coronary sinus A wave blockade and cavo-tricuspid isthmus radiofrequency in patients with typical and atypical right bundle branch block]. Right bundle branch block (RBBB) is associated with increased risk of ventricular tachyarrhythmias and sudden cardiac death. Radiofrequency ablation (RFCA) from the coronary sinus (CS) wall is considered a safe and effective technique for the treatment of ventricular tachyarrhythmias and incessant atrial fibrillation in patients with structurally normal heart. We evaluated the outcome of RFCA of the CS during the run-in period
