Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to a rotary damper of the type having an inertia mass mounted rotatably relative to a housing by a shaft, a friction disk frictionally engaging the rotational inertia mass and mounted by a hub on a rotary drive shaft, and a damping element mounted rotatably relative to the housing by a damping shaft. 2. Description of the Prior Art Such a rotary damper of the described type has been disclosed, for example, in German Disclosure No. 31 16 661 (corresponding to U.S. Pat. No. 4,510,769). The arrangement disclosed in this patent can be utilized for damping the vibrations of a drive shaft of, for example, a planetary-type steering-gear mechanism. The inertia mass is situated in a damping chamber, the housing of which has a generally cylindrical annular wall surrounding the circumferential wall of the inertia mass. A friction disk is frictionally engaged against the circumferential wall of the inertia mass. The disk is mounted by a first hub on the rotary drive shaft and the hub is in turn mounted by a second hub on a damping shaft. The damping shaft itself has a circular cross-section which is adapted to generally correspond to the cross-section of the friction disk. This known arrangement is disadvantageous in that the friction between the friction disk and the inertia mass is dependent upon the axial and radial position of the friction disk. Accordingly, the friction between the friction disk and the inertia mass is not uniform throughout the circumferential wall of the inertia mass, resulting in non-uniformity of the damping of the vibrations of the drive shaft. In addition, it has been found that, when even little amounts of friction are applied to the circumferential wall of the inertia mass, this wall is cracked over time./* crypto/rc2/rc2test.c / / Copyright (C) 1995-1998 Eric Young (eay@cryptsoft.com) * All rights reserved. * * This package is an SSL implementation written * by Eric Young (eay@cryptsoft.com). * The implementation was written so as
